

An ongoing Diary

By Pedro Meyer

Day 14

Duckspool is in a wonderful setting, the rolling hills and the wide open expanses provide my city dweller mind with wonderful relaxation. The workshops take place in the barn at the bottom of the property.

Peter Goldfield, who owns and manages the workshops is not only interested in photography and digital photography to boot, but he is a wonderful cook as well. He loves to provide his guests with exquisite dishes. Coming to a workshop at Duckspool was for me a culinary experience in addition to the pleasure to be amongst talented and interesting people.

We got into a long debate about this image made by Paul, who had conflicting thoughts about how best to use the digital tools he has available in order to enhance his landscape pictures. Please let me know in the forums what you think about this photograph, I am sure Paul would be keen to read your feedback.
